Vaccination in pregnancy aims to directly protect mothers and to passively protect infants who are too young to be vaccinated.¹ Maternal immunisation against diseases such as pertussis and influenza are recommended to protect pregnant women and their newborns against severe disease.¹ During this pandemic, pregnant women are at higher risk of severe illness from COVID-19.² Thus, COVID-19 vaccination is also recommended for people who are pregnant.²

Sanofi Pasteur will be hosting a live webinar session titled 'Vaccination in Pregnancy: The Lesser Known Road to Infant Protection'. Join us on 20th November 2021 (Saturday) at 2:30 pm, as Dr Serene Thain and Dr Voon Hian Yan discuss the importance and relevance of vaccination during pregnancy for infant protection.
